Church and Bell Tower of Kastelruth

The parish church of Castelrotto was rebuilt between 1846 and 1849 after the previous Gothic church had been severely damaged by the fire of 1753 and later demolished. The cemetery was relocated to the apse side of the new building, enlarging the village square.

The church, designed in a simple Neoclassical style, is a typical example of 19th-century sacred architecture. Its spacious three-aisled interior is adorned with large paintings (1886–1898) and altars from the Nazarene school.

The imposing 82-meter-high bell tower was constructed after the 1753 fire and stands as the landmark of Castelrotto. The original bells, cast in 1763, were melted down for war purposes in 1916 and replaced in 1922. On the northwest side, a staircase leads to a Baroque chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary, beneath which lies a crypt.
